SECTION - A (Reading - 20 Marks

1. Read the passage given below and answer the questions by choosing the best alternatives from the given options.

The Chinese proverb "without rice, even the cleverest woman can not cook" is true for innumerable Indians too. Eaten simply boiled, rice is the world's most important staple and it's also had as delectable pulao, biryani, idli, appams, puddings or kheer. And the grain is available in a myriad of varieties the world over.

Contrary to some urban myths, scientists and diet experts know that rice is good for you and can't make you the heavier. It mainly comprises carbohydrates that do not add kilos if consumed in moderation. "Rice is not fattening" avers Richa Anand, chief dietitian at Dr. L.H. Hiranandan Hospital, Mumbai. "An average 100 gm serving of rice has only about 0.4 gm of fat". Infact this serving has no more than 100 calories. And, writes noted culinary expert Tarla Dalal, "Rice has approximately the same calories as whole wheat and hence is not more fattening."

Rice Kanji is therefore a home remedy for diarrhoea. In fact, Kanji with a few accomplishments like coconut chutney and cooked beans, makes for a healthful meal that millions in Kerala enjoy.

White or Brown? Unpolished brown rice may not be as popular as white, but is a good source of complex carbohydrates providing starch and fibre. It takes relatively more time to digest allowing the body to consume the energy released over an extended period. Brown rice is also richer in B vitamins, vitamin E and minerals like manganese and selenium, which makes it more nutritious than white varieties.

Since rice has no cholestrol or sodium, it is safe for those suffering from hypertension. Diabetics who prefer rice could choose brown (but check with your doctor first).

Early in 2003 Tim "Woody" Witezak got some good news: a new job as vice president of sales with a startup energy-efficient lightning company in a heart land U.S. city, Minneapolis, in Minnesota. But with the position came stress and difficulty in sleeping. In June, Woody, 37, saw his family doctor, a general practitioner, who gave him samples of Zoloft, an anti-depressant that also treated anxiety. [The drug's generic name is Sertraline hcl, and is sold in India under other brand names like Serta and Sedep] "This was the first time that he'd ever been to a doctor about an issue like this." Says his wife Kim. "He was a happy person, and had no history of mental illness or depression".

Within a few days, though, Woody experienced several side effects of the drug, night sweats, diarrohea, weight loss and trembling hands. His anxiety worsened; he became uncharacteristically irritable and restless. One evening he came home crying after driving around all day. When the samples ran out after three weeks, Woody 's doctor doubled his dose to 50 mg and urged him to give the drug time. The instructions from Pfizer Inc, the US manufacturer of Zoloft, said it could take four to six weeks to be effective. But two weeks, later Kim recalls. Woody walked in the backdoor with his blue business shirt drenched in sweat. He curled in a foetal position on the kitchen floor, his hands pressing around his head like a vice, and begged: "Help me, I don't know what's happening to me. I think I'm losing my mind. I feel like my head is outside my body looking in."

Less than a week later, Woody seemed to be springing back. He ran almost five kilometres, bought flight tickets for a bachelor party in Las Vegas and when he spoke by phone one morning to Kim, an advertising account executive who was in Detroit on a short business trip, he suggested they celebrate their tenth wedding anniversary in Thailand. That evening though things had changed "His voice sounded hollow" she remembers," I just assumed he was busy and distracted. The last thing he said was," I love you Kim". Woody was dead. He had hung himself from the rafters. By cruel coincidence, the Minneapolis. Star–Tribune ran a front-page story that Day: "UK Finds Link Between Antidepressant And Suicide"

SYMPATHY

I lay in sorrow, deep distressed;

My grief a proud man heard;

His looks were cold, he gave me gold

But not a kindly word

My sorrow passed I paid him back

The gold he gave to me;

Then stood erect and spoke my thanks

And blessed his charity.

I lay in want, in grief and pain

A poor man passed my way;

5

He bound my head, he gave me bread

He watched me night and day,

How shall I pay him back again,

For all he did to me?

Oh, gold is great, but greater far

Is heavenly sympathy!

(Charles Mackay)

Time was when even wild horses couldn't drag me within miles of a barber's shop or salon as they are called now a days. Those were days when the hippie cult held sway and a close cropped guy was an exception. Yet, even in those days civilization was measured by the length of your locks and I was no exception. Much water has flown under the bridge since then and in recent times I begin to yearn for barber's ministrations the moment my hairs kiss my ears. But then there is another reason for this yearning and that is my barber Salim. He is more educated than me, having done his Masters in Literature with a first class first, capable of quoting Chancer & Byron with equal felicity as he could RajaRao and Narayana. He had been an English Professor for a couple of years but when his father, who ran the salon, kicked the bucket he found that it was good economics to make a switchover.

Salim's Salon was salon with a difference. A big signboard announced that politics was taboo. Salim once enlightened me on this, recalling that he had sent a customer packing though only half of his hair had been cut because he had dared to take a political stand, which to add insult to injury was contrarian to Salim's viewpoint. I once asked him," Don't you miss all those students whom you were teaching English literature. I have heard a couple of them say that you were the best among the lot." "Not at all" said Salim without batting an eyelid, "they might no longer be my students but they are my customers now. And I do manage to clear a doubt or two when they come for a sitting." It was then that I realized that the barber's itch for literature had not dampened one bit through combs & scissors had replaced his original tools of trade.
